DEVELOPING A PASSION FOR HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

By GF

I was interested in taking a course on human development (developmental psychology) and I did some research on the Internet. This book came up in a couple of forums and in random searches, so I came here to Amazon to buy it. Turns out that it was not only a good choice, but a good investment. There's a lot of research that went into making this book the goldmine that it is; especially for someone who wants to know more about the topic. It's obviously written for a college course, but if you are self-directed, you can get the full educational value of this publication and have a jump-start on course work like I did.

Excellent text for Human Lifespan Development

By R Carmichael

This is the required reading for the module I am studying. Human Development: a life-span view, 5th edn, is a well laid out, thorough textbook covering human development from conception to death. It is written from several viewpoints: psychodynamic theory, learning theory, cognitive-developmental theory, ecological and systems approaches, and the life-span perspective, which have been excellently integrated to produce a usefully holistic text. I have only given four stars because unfortunately, the book is full of typos, which is disappointing for a text which is on the more expensive side.

Very thorough authors!

By Jen

This is a great book! I rented the more recent edition for use during my Lifespan development class. Sad about the thought of returning it, I took to Amazon and got this one for a great price! I highly recommend reading it. If you think you've got life "all figured out", think again! I have learned so much about stages of life, parenting styles, brain development, and much more!
