Grade 2-5 A dinosaur book collaboration between Arnold Lobel and Jack Prelutsky sounds almost too good to be true. And that's the case with this book, which has good intentions but doesn't quite carry through with them. No problem with Lobel's illustrations, which combine just the right amount of fantasy and realism to capture a child's imagination. It's Prelutsky's verse which is the detractor here. True, some of the poems are rollicking and fun, such as these lines describing Deinonychus: "Ferocity was its predominant trait,/ its habits were purely predacious,/ it ate what it caught, and it caught what it ate/ in the days of the early Cretaceous." But for many of these poems, much of the verse seems confined by the subject matter, as if Prelutsky were afraid to let his imagination enhance what he considers factual information. Sadly, some of the information he reiterates about dinosaurs is out of date; the idea of small-brained, prehistoric plodders doomed for extinction is no more. Prelutsky would do well to get hold of a copy of Bakker's Dinosaur Heresies (Morrow, 1986) and update his perception of herbivores and Sauropods, in particular. Thoughtful pronunciation guides help readers tackle colossal dinosaur names, but young readers will still struggle with the many other multisyllabic words that set the cadence of these rhymes. A masterwork!

By LaCuerva

Prelutsky writes fun poems for children; he has a few dozens of book out.

This one is by far the best - a combination of funny dinosaur poems with illustrations by Arnold Lobel. And the songs can be sung to the familiar tunes of nursery rhymes! Try the first one, "Tyrannosaurus Was a Beast," to the tune of "Mary Had a Little Lamb." Your kids will love it - mine are in their 20s now, and still remember various poems!

Perfect!!!!

By Elizabeth Wren

My son was given this book 26 years ago--the best dinosaur book ever. Wonderful read aloud. The classic Prelutsky poems will become favorites. Your little one will know them by heart and in turn will also know every detail of each dino!!

Love Jack Prelutsky

By Emily-the-evil

Love Jack Prelutsky, his poems are made to be sung and enjoyed. Pick your own tune to piggy back the poem to and enjoy yourself. If you read this one please know that I have decided that if I were a dinosaur I would be a Brachiosaurus.
